John McCarty was born in Wayne County, New York, March 12, 1842, and died April 19, 1920. Never able to remember his father who died near the time of his son's birth, he early helped assume the responsibilty of his mother and three sisters and up to the time of his mother's death, about the time of the outbreak of the Civil War, he had, like many another boy similarly placed, developed much unselfishness and sense of responsibility for others in trying to help those of his own family. His father, John McCarty, was of Irish birth; while his mother, Christianna Thompson came from Norway in her youth; and he loved to relate instance which she had told him of her life there among her beloved mountains. Though her coming to America separated her from her family, she brought up her children to honor the high ideals she had been taught to cherish. On January 23, 1862, feeling very service of his country he inlisted at Kalamo, Mich., in Co. D., Thirteenth Michigan Infantry. He was like so many of the volunteers, a slender youth to whom had not yet come the strength of manhood, but on such ing of the managers of the Michigan shoulders was borne the burden of the Stores comany at Flint, attended by Civil war and the elasticity of youth

They followed them and were presented at Nashville, Tenn., a little later. They were of "elegant silk and fine workmanship" and three years later when the 265 veteran survivors returned to Kalamazoo, they formally returned the colors, darkened by the smoke of thirteen battles, to the donors and today they stand in the State Capitol bearing honorable testimony to the service of the men who counted not their life as a penny's worth beside its advancement.

At the close of the war he bought the week. a farm in Kalamo which was his home till 1902 when his health which had been much impairedby his four years of war, finally made it necessary that he leave the farm he had loved so long and the last twelve years of his flife was spent in this city.

On January 11, 1872, he married Janette Bullock, and to this marriage was born two daughters, Tuliecte and
