REMEMBER WHEN

Who remembers who the man was that chased a pail of paint around the Congregational Church in 1865. This paint was being drawn up with a rope and pulley and in some way got out of control and started on its downward trip. It went down in short jerks the rope catching at times but didn't catch enough times as the man at the bottom missed it by a hair and got most of the paint in his face. If the man that got the bath is still in town, please don't get mad at the editor, but go see Alec Lake, he knows more about it than we do.

Who has got one of those fancy needle books that W. H. Benedict gave to his customers in 1901. Over twenty years ago. Mrs. Swift has got one and it looks as though it just came from the printer.

The older girls class of the Congregational Church, under the leadership of their teacher, Mrs. H. B. Johnson, have for their motto, "Good Better, Best", and they are surely carrying out this motto in all their work, and especially in the way they entertained their mothers at a supper in the Chapel last Saturday evening.

After the invocation by Mrs. Frank Ambrose, they all enjoyed the bountiful supper which was furnished and served by the girls. After supper, the following program was rendered, the President of the Class, Miss Rhea Faust in charge. The musical numbers on the program were a violin duet by Dorothy and Vera Loveland, a piano duet by Mrs. Scarvell and Lucile Johnson, and two vocal solos by Mrs. Scarvell. Readings were given by Miss Marjorie Jordan, Miss Yerkes, and Mrs. E. H. Eckhart.

Miss Mary Grant spoke on the subject, "Our Mothers." She said she was sure that all the girls appreciated their mothers, but some times we did not take time to consider how much we really owed them for what they have done for us and did not always express our appreciation.

Mrs. E. H. Eckhart spoke on the subject, "Our Girls." She said this organization meant much for the girls and there is real force in organized effort. Each one has a duty to perform, to the Church and Sunday school, to the community, and to home and mother. She said these girls are now passing through the character building age and they must build on a strong foundation if they were to withstand the storms of life, and in order to build the right kind of
