ECKHART—SOUTHWORTH

(Lansing State Journal)
 The chapel of People's church, E. Lansing, was the scene of a lovely wedding Sunday afternoon, August 12 when Miss Madelon Cleone Eckhart, daughter of Edward H. Eckhart, became the bride of Maurice E. Southworth, son of Mr. and Mrs. William E. Southworth. The Rev. Martin Luther Fox of People's church heard the vows in the presence of the immediate families.
 Miss Hazel Eckhart, sister of the bride, was maid of honor, and Wendell Hutchinson of Monroe, brother-in-law of the bridegroom, acted as best man. The bride was lovely in a simple gown of white crepe trimmed in chantilly lace, with which she carried an arm bouquet of Johanna Hill roses, larkspur, and baby's breath. Miss Eckhart wore chartreuse moss crepe and carried a bouquet of Briarcliffe ross and baby's breath.
 After the ceremony a supper was served at the home of the bride's father. Mr. and Mrs. Southworth left afterward for a trip through northern Michigan and to Chicago. Mrs. Southworth's going-away outfit was a suit of navy blue sheer with navy accessories.

Cecil Rowers and family have moved from the Downing house to the Roscoe Williams house on West Main street, owned by Henry Flannery, and vacated by the Danes.

J. H. McCotter is within four months of 90; he says his West Lawrence Ave. home was built 60 years ago at the same time he was building the Horace Hawkins home in Vermontville; the outside is of brick veneer, the interior is of finished butternut.

Charles W. Garfield, 86, "Grand Old Man" of Grand Rapids, passed away at Butterworth hospital. Sunday morning, following a heart attack last Wednesday. No man in the city was more highly respected and beloved than Mr. Garfield. He was the father of the playground movement in that city and many civic enterprises, and had done much in public park work. Garfield Park was named in his honor. The funeral services were held at Park Congregational Church, of which he was a member, Tuesday. His widow survives. His first wife was a daughter of Mr. and Mrs. S. S. Rockwell, and sister of Miss Edith Rockwell, former well-known and highly respected Vermontville residents.

The Tubbs family enjoyed a pot luck birthday dinner Sunday at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Fred Kroger. The gathering was a surprise for the guests of honor, Orin B. Tubbs and Wendall Marten. An electrical storm accompanied by wind that appeared in places of the cyclone order struck Vermontville village shortly after five p. m. yesterday. Several trees in different parts of town were broken and uprooted. Some small buildings were blown over and many limbs were broken off shade and fruit trees. The large barn now owned by Roy Mathews and used as a garage for his large country trucks, was taken off its foundation and blown to the north and is beyond repair. The barn was built in 1910 by Edwin Tyler, and shortly after his death in 1924, Miss Myrta Tyler sold the barn and a portion of the land adjoining it to Mr. Mathews for a brooder house and poultry yard. Later Mr. Mathews went out of the chicken business and this summer he converted it into a large double garage. Fortunately he carried windstorm insurance. On Mrs. Lizzie Lake's place just north a large spy tree was split in the trunk and the south side of her hen house was pushed in several inches, but not moved off the foundation. A large tree that stood at the northwest corner of the barn at the Mrs. Oda Gehman Rood place, occupied by Floyd Titmarsh and family was uprooted and blew over between the house and the barn. A large tree was blown across Main street in front of Hiram Grant's and an electric pole blown down. At Mrs. Bell Hall's a large tree was split and part of it blew over the road. The garage on George Garrett's place occupied by Lon Baker was blown down and F. J. Bailey's yard is in bad shape. The electricity was off until nearly nine o'clock and the country service was not restored until this morning.
