Death of Educator Native of Vermontville Mourned at Saginaw

Of interest to older Vermontville residents are the many tributes published in the Saginaw News to William W. Warner, who died there Feb. 8 at the age of 90. A native of Vermontville, Mr. Warner had given 53 years of his life to the Saginaw public schools and since 1938 had held the title of superintendent emeritus.
Mr. Warner was born at Vermontville April 7, 1861, five days before cannon fire at Fort Sumter touched off the Civil war. His first teaching position was at Barryville school, west of Nashville. He attended Olivet college, the University of Michigan and Drexel Institute but
