From a Sinner's Diary

I told Claud Shafer he'd have to get his peaches somewhere else. He said he couldn't for then he'd have to have the money. Those dear boys. I think so much of them it's a pleasure to be called out at 4 A. M. to take a hurry-up message half a mile. Ray was milking at that unholy hour and singing at the very tip end of his voice. I wish I lived close enough to him to always hear. No words only "do-de-do." Beats robin songs. When he gets in my cherry trees he pays me. Half way there, with that song in her ears, the dog began to give tongue at me. Hattie said she just soon clinch anybody unless they spoke her name. So I said "Now, now Gyp," with my soft pedal on and she began to wag her stub tail so hard it made her turn hand springs. Lynette Freemire.
