Max Miller Dies In Sleep Saturday At Nashville Home

Funeral services for Max Miller, 57, life-long resident of Barry county and for the last 15 years a heating contractor at Nashville who died unexpectedly Saturday in his sleep, were held at 2 p. m. Monday at the Vogt Funeral home at Nashville.

The Rev. Carter Preston officiated and burial was in Lakeview cemetery, Nashville.

Mr. Miller had been ill Friday, but thought he had contracted a cold while at work. Death, which occurred a few minutes before his wife Gladys, found him, was attributed to a heart ailment.

Mrs. Miller is the Nashville area correspondent for The Hastings Banner.

Mr. Miller worked many years for the Michigan Central Railroad before going into heating sales and installation. He had been a councilman of the village for several terms and served as president of the Nashville Maple Syrup Association. He had been a member of the Nashville Volunteer Fire Department for many years.

Mr. Miller had also been an officer in the Knights of Pythias when it was active in Nashville, and had been associated in Boy Scout work.

He was born in Lacey, the son of Jesse and Maud (Hill) Miller. On May 14, 1927, he married Gladys Remington and they made their home in Nashville.

In addition to his wife, he is survived by a son, Neal R. Miller in military service at Ft. Leonard Wood, Mo.; a daughter, Mrs. Edgar (Beverly) Backe, living near Coats Grove, and a sister, Mrs. Helen Hecker, Nashville.
